“Not one of us slept well the first night on Angel Island. . . . we girls were called to go to a meeting of a Board of Special Inquiry. . . . There weren’t too many questions, and the hearing didn’t take too long. The officials just asked for our names and the name of our village. . . . There would be no further inquiry on that day. . . . It was very hard not knowing when we would be called again for questioning. There wasn’t anything to do to pass the time. Time moved as slowly as a walking turtle and I became bored. I didn’t like being locked up.”
